

For Immediate Release October 17, 2008

Congressman Paul Seeks Office Space on Galveston Island

Washington, D.C. - Congressman Ron Paul announced today that he is actively seeking office space on Galveston Island.

"I am entirely committed to maintaining services to the people of Galveston and Chambers Counties, and I am committed to finding a new location for my office on Galveston Island."

Paul's Chief of Staff, Tom Lizardo, stated that once a new location is chosen it will take several days to get the office set up.

Paul said that his staff has asked for assistance from both the City and County in locating appropriate space on Galveston Island.